

The Odor of Violet

Book Synopsis: After losing his sight in a terrible accident, and to learn that the woman he was planning to marry did not love him enough to accept him sightless, Damien Falconer was devastated. Struggling to cope with his disability, he isolated himself from society, allowing no one to get close to him, but his personal assistant, Jake. Upon learning Jake was soon to leave his employ and return to Scotland, Damien was forced to advertise for his replacement. Among the applicants who answered his ad was Lisa Andrews, a registered nurse from Connecticut. But Damien was adamant that he would not be replacing Jake with a woman. His argument was, he did not feel comfortable with a woman doing the things that Jake did for him, but one whiff of Lisas unique scent and Damien found himself fighting a blistering physical attraction the likes of which hed never known before. Should he hire her or should he ignore what his other senses, which had remained dormant up until now, were screaming at him. Damien rustled with the question for several days, but in the end, he caved. And so began a hunger for a woman he couldnt see...could only recognize by her unique scent...yet wanted like hed never wanted anything before.
