

The only easy day was yesterday. Valerie Swan has been working towards her PhD in Microbiology for nearly five years and truth be told, she's starting to burn out and begins wondering just when did she stop living her own life. Casper Dawson is everything that Valerie isn't: carefree, wild, and living life to the fullest with his brothers in the Valley Sons MC. A chance meeting at the side of the road sends the two into a wild night of passion and carnal pleasure. When the clarity of morning comes, Valerie begins to question everything in her life, as well as just exactly where the handsome man next to her fits in... EXCERPT I was clumsy enough to stumble again, as I was getting out of the water. This time Casper grabbed me around my shoulders. He pressed his chest against my back, as if to keep me upwards, but I could tell it was because he couldn't help getting as close to me as he could manage without being too obvious. The wind blew my small towel in half, so Casper shook it to get the sand off it, careful not to cause any sand to fly in my direction. He placed the towel back on the sand and held my hand for support, as I sat down on my end. This time he sat an inch away from me. My legs were covered in sand, and I started dusting some of it off them. "Here, let me," Casper said. He massaged the sand off my slick legs, gently moving over every inch. He leaned over my body, supporting himself with one hand and caressing me with the other. He started with the toes on my right foot, then went up the sole of my foot, up the ankle, over the muscles of my shin, around the curves of my knee. When he started massaging up my leg and found some sand in-between my thighs, the sensation made me gasp, "Ohhh." I felt my back relaxing and tensing, pulsing against his fingers. He followed the same slow movements across my other leg and then over my arms. Then, Casper sat behind me and wrapped me in an embrace, gently nudging me to lean back against his smooth chest.
